U.S. Economy Slowed Sharply In 3d Quarter

By Jane Seaberry

Washington Past Service WASHINGTON — The U.S. economy grew at a surprisingly low annual rate of 1.9 percent during the third quarter, more sluggish than earlier thought and the lowest since the end of the last recession, the Commerce Department reported Tuesday. The rate of growth in inflationadjusted gross national product plummeted from the 7.1-percent rate in the second quarter to its lowest rate since the fourth quarter of 1982, when the economy grew at a 0.5-percent rate, the department

The figures increased doubt among economists that the nation's output of goods and services will grow as strongly as the Reagan ad-ministration has said is needed to help reduce the projected federal budget deficit of $200 billion.

Economists, including an informal adviser to the president, said there is no evidence that the economy can rebound enough to grow at the 4 percent rate next year and through the end of the decade that the Reagan administration has

However, the administration re-mained upbeat and said it expected a rebound from a temporary bill sometime next year.

[A presidential spokesman, Mar-lin Fitzwater, said, "We bave been anticipating a couple of slow growth transition quarters as we move from high-growth to a more sustainable pace." The Associated Press reported from Santa Barbara. California, where President Ronald Reagan is vacationing. [Mr. Fitzwater added that "most forecasters are predicting a return to moderate growth next year," and he said he did not believe the administration planned to change its estimate of 4 percent economic

"li's evident from what's going on in the fourth quarter that growth is still stalled," said Alan Greenspan, an economist and an informal adviser to the president There would have to be some fairly significant pickup very soon to get back on track" of economic growth that the administration is anticipating.

"The data are unamhiguous." said Allen Sinai, an economist "They tell us a growth recession and maybe something worse" may occur. "All of these numbers were lower than the lowest expectations of the economy," he said. Some economists have said the economy has already entered the first phase of a growth recession, when output increases too slowly to create the necessary oumber of jobs to keep unemployment from rising.

Economists also blamed the increasing sluggishness of the economy on high interest rates, which they said contributed to a reduction in consumer spending on housing and durable goods, such as major appliances and furniture.

The administration's budgetcutting targets depend on a real growth rate of 4 percent annually through 1988 and gross national product increases to about $5 tril-lion by 1988. GNP was at an annual rate of $3.7 trillion during the third quarter.

"The weak economy makes it very, very difficult to do anything about the deficit," Mr. Sinai said. "There's a one-in-four shot this episode could turn into a reces-

A Dust Bowl of the Spirit: Farm Crisis Erodes Social Fabric in the U.S. Middle West

By Andrew H. Malcolm New York Times Service

SPENCER, Iowa - "You know," said the mental health counselor, "there is a psychiatric cancer that is fraying our region's social fabric, pitting farmer against banker, farmer against farmer, farmer against wife and farmer against

The counselor, Peter Zevenbergen, who is executive director of the Northwest Iowa Mental Health Center here, is not alooe in his concern. Much has been written about the continuing financial crisis of the American family farm, how the combination of stubbornly high interest rates, depressed commodity prices and declining land values is forcing record numbers of farm sales, foreclosures and bankruptcies in the nation's breadbasket. But butle attention has been paid to the emotional erosion that is devastating many farm families and their small towns.

Experts say the trouble takes a variety of forms - abuse of wives, children or even animals, alcoholism, severe depression and suicide. Last month a pistol-wielding Nebraska farmer was

For years, Iowa State University's extension service has been publishing booklets on soil ero-sion and insect infestations. Now its literature covers such topics as stress management, with detailed advice to wives on signs of impending suicide in busbands.

"Right now," said the Reverend Tom Munn of Royal, Iowa, "we are into some mighty tough times in rural America. And I'm afraid they are going to last a good while."

The stagnant farm economy has not hit all areas with the same force. But abandoned farmhouses are scattered everywhere. Most towns have at least a few boarded-up businesses, adding an air of decay to streets that once bustled with shoppers on Saturdays.

Teachers in this agricultural area of northwest Iowa, nearly 500 miles (800 kilometers) west of Chicago, told of grade-school pupils crying in class for no apparent reason or becoming unusually aggressive at play. Investigation invariably disclosed financial and emotional tensions at Small-town bankers who were telling farmers home. In an interview, one parent, the object of a partial bank repossession, said her children would run and hide at unexpected knocks on the farmhouse door. Mr. Zevenbergen's center, a nonprofit clinic that receives 60 percent of its funds from nine counties and 40 percent of its funds in private fees, recently organized a group discussion to let proud, isolated families learn that they were not alone in financial difficulty, a common misconwoman said angrily. "What about our right to make a living? We go pushing land reforms in Central America so farm families can get started while in our own country family farms are getting crushed."

"We started out many years ago with nothing," said a man who drew the evening's only laugh, "and today we've still got most of that left."

Bankers came in for much criticism. "I don't understand," said one man, "why they can't just lower the interest rate instead of selling a farmer out completely at a fraction of his farm's value. Either way the bank loses money, but this way they'd get it all back over time and they'd keep people who care about the land on the land." Four bankers in the area, interviewed separately, said this was already happening, because so much foreclosed land and repossessed equipment had depressed market prices. One banker said he had become so consumed with clients' difficulties and their threat to his institution that his own marriage was endangered. "I'd come home wanting to forget every-thing," he said, "and she said I'd become a

More than 900 senators and deputies will assemble in the lower house Wednesday, initially to vote on a Communist motion to prolong a parliamentary inquiry against Mr. Andreotti and former Finance Minister Mario Tanassi. If the motion is defeated, the rightist Italian Social Movement will present a demand that parliament send the two men for trial on corruption charges.

A Turin investigating magistrate requested the inquiry in 1981, suspecting the two men of conspiring to ohtain the promotion of General Giudice, who in 1982 was convicted of corruption and dereliction of duty in a gasoline-tax fraud. #### 192 Poles Defect in West Germany

HAMBURG (Reuters) — A group of 192 Poles failed to return to a cruise ship here and more than 100 have asked for political asylum, a city spokesman said Tuesday. Others were believed to have gone to other parts of West Germany in search of relatives and friends.

The liner Stefan Batory, on which many Poles have fled to the West in the past, arrived in Hamburg from the Polish port of Gdynia with 608 passengers and left Monday night for Rotterdam.

Immigration and naturalization offices in Hamburg were crammed with refugees filing applications for asylum.

Times reported from Washington: President Ronald Reagan's central budget team has begun to call attention to the soaring national debt as a way of persuading him to make a more aggressive attack on the federal deficit, administration officials said Monday.

The advisers have stressed that the debt's growing share of the U.S. economy and the prospect that it could force interest rates higher are more serious than any one year's deficit

Using that argument, the officials said, the nine-member economic "core group" is pressing Mr. Reagan to accept targets for a fairly steep decline in federal spending for the next three years.

With the deficit now at more than 5 percent of the national out-put of goods and services, the proposed goals were to push it down to 4 percent of the gross national product in fiscal 1986, which begins next Oct. 1, to 3 percent in fiscal 1987, and to 2 percent in

As a percentage of the gross national product, the debt has grown Further cutbacks in Medicare from 28 percent in the fiscal year 1980 to an estimated 37 percent in 1985 and 39 percent in 1986. Except for a small increase in the mid-1950s, the ratio had been declining since the late 1940s.

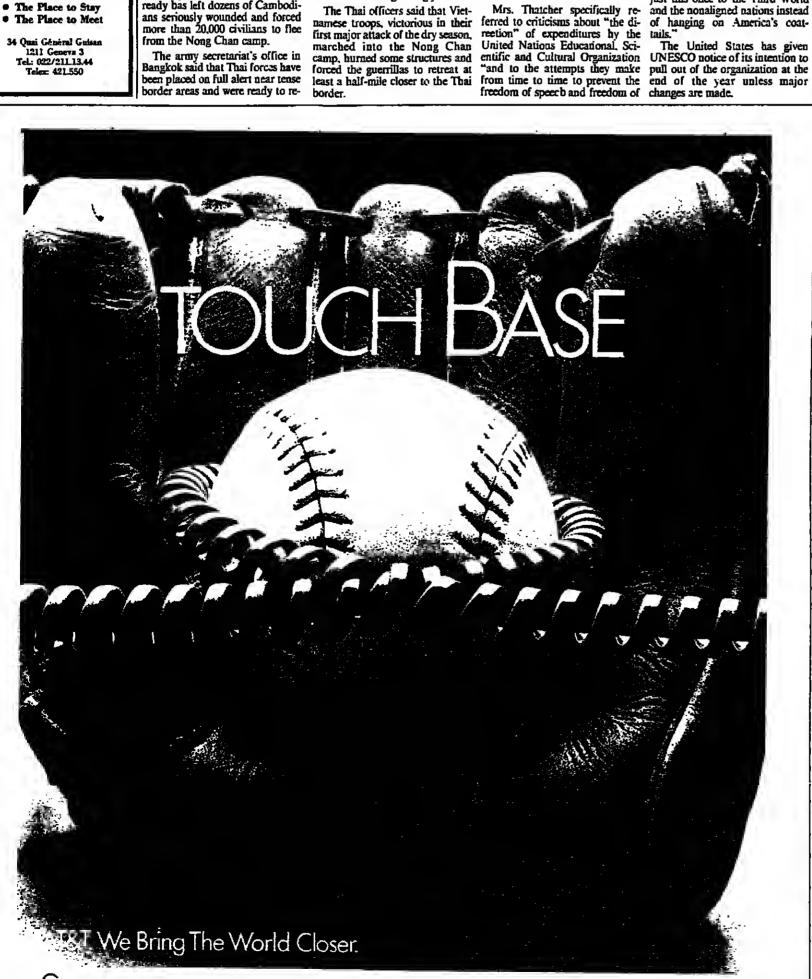

To many economists, the debtto-GNP ratio is an effective way to illustrate the impact of the accumulation of federal budget deficit on the overall economy. It illustrates the extent of borrowing by the Treasury to carry the debt in com-petition with business and consumer borrowing. Mr. Reagan left for his California vacation without indicating whether he accepted the "core group's" proposals for spending cuts to reduce the deficit.

Because of the president's ab-sence, the officials said they were concerned that decisions on the administration's next economic plan would be delayed at least until the second week of December. "We're trying to develop features of the budget that would put us on an acceptable growth path without a tax increase," said a senior offcial who is close to the core group's talks. "What we need from the president is to know whether be wants that path and which options he wants to accept to get there."

Bruce Weinrod, a lawyer and former Senate aide. Richard Shultz, an associate professor of international politics at the Fletcher School of Law and Diplomacy at Tufts University, wrote the chapter on insurgency and terrorism.

The sections of the report on defense and arms control, which were scheduled to be released Tuesday, strongly support the administration's efforts during the past four years to modernize the U.S. military. The report said that the huildup must continue and that the administration should buy more of some weapons, such as the B-1 bomber, than now planned. The report sharply criticized Pentagon management during the first term and said the defense secretary should take charge of efforts to improve the way weapons are purchased. "While substantial progress has been made in force modernization in the last four years, more now needs to be done to fix the way America does its defense business and spends its defense dollars," the report said.

The Heritage report strongly urged the administration to abandon the Anti-Ballistic Missile treaty, which the United States and Soviet Union signed in 1972, and move swiftly to develop weapons that could defend MX missile sites against attacking missiles. This would require a restructuring of Mr. Reagan's strategic defense initiative, often referred to as the "Star Wars" defense, which seems to be emphasizing longerterm research projects aimed at defending a wide expanse of territory While supporting those research efforts, the report said the Pentagon should move as quickly as possible to deploy "point-defense" weapons around "high-value military tar-

There Sits a Terrorist

Colonel Moamer Qadhafi of Libya has taught us a good deal in his bungled attempt to reach into Egypt to kill a political opponent. The going rate for murder among British and Maltese contractors is $250,000, plus $150,000 to the Egyptian locals for dirty work. The fee is to the Egyptian locals for dirty work. The fee is payable on receipt, at the Libyan Embassy in Malta, of a clear snapshot of the dead victim. That evidence becomes the basis for boasts that patriotic "suicide squads" have eliminated yet another infidel or Zionist toul.

Thanks to superb Egyptian police work, one of these sordid plots has now been exposed. Shrewdly misled, Colonel Qadhafi's "diplomais" and radio boasted about a killing that never occurred. That was good news. But it is not good enough if the world does nothing more to punish a now-documented case of state terrorism, involving flagrant abuse of diplomatic privilege.

All civilized countries denounce terrorism but none has been willing to close embassies. deny landing rights, freeze assets, or impose any other concerted sanctions. Even after Col-onel Qadhafi's "diplomats" killed a London policewoman, Britain and its allies were content to thunder against him without action.

Now the cost of this acquiescence is plain.

As Secretary of State George Shultz has aptly insisted: "Terrorism is a contagious disease that will inevitably spread if it goes untreated. We need a strategy to cope with terrorism in all its varied manifestations. . . And we have to recognize that the burden falls on us, the democracies - no one else will cure the disease for us." He went even further to propose using military force against merely suspected culprits, a doctrine so sweeping that it provoked justifiable dissent among Americans. But Libya's infractions fall within the wiser half of the secretary's argument - the call for collective action against proven state sponsorship of terrorism.

So be it. Colonel Qadhafi's trespasses are no longer conjectural. He has used Libya's oil wealth 10 subvert his neighbors and his diplomats to murder enemies abroad. Is the world so hungry for his oil that it will go on pretending he conducts business in the normal fashion? Where are the proposals to punish his conduct? Who will move to close Libya's embassies and isolate its agents? Who will present the case for sanctions at the United Nations? And who will go on defending the grant of diplomatic immunity to proven murderers?

Palestinian Alternatives

Much interest is developing over the pros-pect that Yasser Arafat may be about to convene the PLO's "parliament," the Palestine National Council, in Jordan. It proceeds from the possibility that, since Chairman Arafat's numerous foes in the group have been ordered by their Syrian masters to boycott any proceeding sanctioned by him or King Hussein of Jordan, he may be abandoning the requirement for consensus that has paralyzed PLO diplomacy. If the Palestine Liberation Organization is split, the suggestion runs, the part loyal to his ostensibly moderate leadership may find its way to peace talks with Israel. Except that there is scant basis for hoping that Yasser Arafat's PLO, split or whole, can take the Palestinians anyplace they want to go. Having toppled Lebanon into chaos, Mr. Arafat lost the PLO's last military option when the Israelis invaded and routed his forces in 1982. He had lost the PLO's best political option when be could not, or would not, take advantage of Camp David's quite plausible opening to the Palestinians. Yet one more chance arose when the Reagan administration authorized a private citizen to meet with him 50 times; he completely wasted this rich diplomatic opportunity. As much as everyone would like to see Palestinian moderation encouraged, it takes a willing suspension of disbelief to imagine that Mr. Arafat is the man for the job.

What is the alternative? Perhaps there is no alternative for the Palestinians. Everyone knows what is required: a simple statement, by a credible body of Palestinians, that they de-mand a state and that, to get it, they are prepared to accept Israel and sit down and negotiate peace. Only such a turn could begin to meet Israelis' valid concern for their securi-ty, to melt their discredited concerns for territorial expansion, and to bring American diplo-macy into effective play. Without such a turn, there is a sharp limit to what others can do for the Palestinians.

Meanwhile, the Reagan administration has a modest idea, something to work on at least until a moment for broader diplomacy reappears. The idea is, in Secretary of State George Shultz's phrase, a concern for the "quality of life" in the West Bank — not just improvements in the standard of living but in the relationship between ruler and ruled: a lighter police hand, open universities, local development, a restoration of Arab mayors. Many West Bank residents see it as a half loaf. Some Israeli officials see it as a risk. The argument for it is that nothing better is going now.

Progress in El Salvador

From El Salvador's rebels come hedged signs of interest in "bumanizing" the war to reduce the civilian toll and in exploring both a cease-fire and eventual participation in gov-setting out a negotiating agenda. That exercise, erament-run elections. Do these signs indicate that the Salvadoran left is finally bowing to the people's evident desire for peace and to the advantages in continuity of aid and purpose that Jose Napoleon Duarte's election and Ronald Reagan's re-election have conferred upon the government? Or are those gestures meant simply to distract the government and its U.S. patrons, while the guerrillas use time thus bought to prepare for harsber battle later?

The deep suspicions and still-live conflicts of the civil war rule out a conclusive answer now. That such questions can be asked at all, however, is evidence that the peace process begun last month at La Palma is promoting new modes of thought on both sides.

From the expectation of endless battle - a condition that plays into the hands of extremists — the struggle in El Salvador has moved to an in-between state in which proposals for accommodation are being offered and the civilians who are offering them are necessarily coming more to the fore. Just the other day the two sides saw fit to take part in a public debate in Los Angeles, in which each sought to put its best foot forward for an American gallery.

With the terms of a second conference in El Salvador still being discussed, it is obvious that the two sides are only at the beginning of however, is drawing out a familiar set of poliocal dynamics: Within each camp the military wing suspects that the political wing may be soft. This is the virtue of opening negotiations. It does not ensure that the faction that is more inclined to test negotiations will bold its own, but it sharpens the issue.

From the public evidence, neither President Duarte nor his counterpart on the left, his former running mate Guillermo Ungo, has yet convinced the other of his seriousness. This they must do. Despite their falling out, they still have more in common with each other than either has with the hard-right and hardleft allies they subsequently found.

Mr. Reagan's firmness in support of the Salvadoran government clearly warmed the climate in which peace talks began at La Paima. Whether that climate can be sustained if things get out of hand next door in Nicaragua is very doubtful. And Mr. Duarte still needs steady U.S. help in drying up the death squads and in advancing the sort of economic policies that give him a political payoff. Otherwise the war will go on destroying El Salvador.

-THE WASHINGTON POST.

Other Opinion

Luring the Russians to the Table

Put in simple terms, the policy of the first Reagan administration toward the Russians was to convince them that a return to the conference table would be to their own advantage, though there was some doubt as to whether Moscow was indeed still capable of engaging in a process of give-and-take. ft would be rash to assume that these doubts have now been dissipated, but Washington remains willing to resume and intensify negotiations. However, nobody in the U.S. capital is under any illusions about the difficulty of persuading the Russians to resume talks, while in some fields all hope of arriving at verifiable agreements seems to have been abandoned.

Butler, U.S.M.C., retired, caused a sensation [on Nov. 20] by testifying before the House committee investigating un-American activities that he had been approached by a mysterious group to head a march of 500,000 ex-service men on Washington and establish a Fascist regime that would take over the rule of the country. The stormy petrel of the Marine Corps hinted that the backers of this political coup were wealthy Wall Street brokers who were ready to throw 53,000,000 into a fight to oust the President and the New Deal. Representative Samuel Dickstein, chairman of the committee, said that indications were that the general's testimony was correct.

U.S. Political Envoys: Start Them at Home

N EW YORK — Long ago, the Venetian ambassador to Rome, en route to his post, was staying overnight with the grand duke of Tuscany. The duke complained of the poor quality of the envoy the Republic of Venice had sent to his court. "I am not surprised," was the Venetian's reply. "We have many fools in Venice." To which the duke retorted, "We also have fools in Florence, but we take care not to export them." Florence, but we take care not to export them." Sadly, in the United States the problem of exporting foolish or at least inadequate ambassadors continues to be with us.

The root of the problem lies in the willingness of both poliocal parties to deal in "bought com-missions" for a significant number of ambassadorial appointments. Bought commissions in the British Army disappeared years ago; unfortunately, when it comes to an important portion of U.S. ambassadorial appointments, we are still in the era of the Charge of the Light Brigade. The the era of the Charge of the Light Singade. The world is simply too dangerous, and America's role too critical, for this to go on.

Each succeeding administration has found American embassies around the world a happy hunting ground in which to satisfy political obligations, financial or otherwise. While some non-career appointees have been outstanding and others have been very good, many have been neither. As a result, a number of U.S. diplomatic establishments, not to mention lone-suffering establishments, not to mention long-suffering bost governments, have continued to be burdened by ambassadorial leadership that is made-quate and occasionally worse. This goes on even though the United States has developed one of the finest career diplomatic corps in the world. well-stocked with underused professionals.

Reform would not require an end to all non-career appointments. No administration should be denied the right to send abroad such distinguished noncareer appointees as Ellsworth Bunker, David Bruce, Chester Bowles, John Sherman Cooper, Mike Mansfield, Arthur Burns and others of their caliber. They follow in the great tradition of Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson -and of the Adamses. Rather, what must end are unqualified appointments whose only real basis is political clout.

By William B. Macomber

Surprisingly, however, there is one area in which more, not less, noncareer appointments make sense, and that is in Washington - in the top layer of the State Department's domestic leadership. This is a group that starts with the secretary and runs down through the deputy secretary, the undersecretaries, the assistant secretaries and the deputy assistant secretaries. It includes a number of their immediate aides and special assistants. While the professional staffs below this level should be immune from the invasion of outside appointments, this upper layer should have a higher percentage of outside ppointees than is sometimes the case.

Why? To begin with, occupants of these positions work under close-at-hand supervision, which is not possible in the case of their more remotely positioned ambassadorial colleagues. Accordingly, failures and inadequacies are detected much earlier.

Second, it is the occupants of these key domes-tic posts who are called on to support the presi-dent and secretary of state in moments of controversy. This is a logical and proper role for politically appointed subordinates.

It is true that professional career diplomats have shown themselves willing to play this role ton as part of their obligation to serve loyally whatever administration is in power. But it is not a particularly appropriate role for them, and when they do take on this responsibility their future usefulness is placed at risk because of the suspicion that attaches 10 them when 2 new administration arrives on the scene.

A further reason for bringing more noncareer appointees into these senior domestic ranks is that it gives the party in power an opportunity to develop a pool of experienced foreign policy leaders not only for itself but for future adminis-trations. Both parties need to develop far deeper reserves of diplomatic talent. This problem can be significantly remedied by using certain layers of the State Department as a training ground. Each administration should seek to entice noncareer supporters into diplomatic work, but in the right way and by the right route. Unless they are especially qualified appointees of the Mansfield-Burns caliber, the noncareerist political types should not be sent abroad to run an ssy, where inexperience can be damaging. They should begin back home as supervised aides within the State Department's leadership ranks, where they can be trained, moved on to positions where they can be trained, moved on to positions of growing responsibility and become part of an expanding pool of their party's foreign policy talent. From the most successful in this group should come the bulk of any administration's noncareer ambassadorial appointees. Prescreened and experienced, they can add to the breadth and quality of U.S. efforts abroad.

The writer, now president of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, was a political appointee in the State Department under Presidents Eisenhower, Kennedy, Johnson, Nixon and Ford, and served as ambassador to Jordan and Turkey, He contributed this comment to The New York Times.

Downdraft On Europe's Air Fares

By Giles Merritt

BRUSSELS — Europe's airlines are proof that European industrial uncompetitiveness stems from more than technological decline. Since 1978 the air fares paid by business travelers in Europe have doubled in real terms. During that time U.S. deregulation has made some domestic flights in America cheaper than taking a Greyhound bus.

European governments and their protected "flag carrier" airlines are rightly coming under increasing pres-sure to liberalize their web of restrictive agreements. Competition from charter airlines for boliday business has already forced advanced booking economy schemes on the scheduled carriers, but most Europeans still fail to see why they should pay 25 cents a mile on, say, the Athens-London route, when some trans-Atlantic fares are now down to 5 cents a mile.

But the pressures that can be exerted by the traveling public are sadly unfocused, while national security played by those who resist deregulation. So it is in the face of bitter opposition from Europe's national airlines and almost all their parent governments that the EC Commission has renewed its attack on their price-fixing and pooling plans.

An earlier bid by Brussels to outlaw the airlines most glaring annitrust abuses was shot down in flames several years ago, so the Eurocrats have compromised with a watered-down deregulation formula known as Memorandum No. 2. It contains a proposal for "fare zones" that would set minimum and maximum prices on air routes and leave the airlines to fight it out within those terms.

The upper and lower limits in each zone would be comparable to those which for the past two years have into promising immunity from antioperated on the North Atlantic routes. Supporters of the EC scheme say it would banish the fare-slashing. loss-inducing anarchy that had characterized the airlines' Battle of the Atlando. Critics charge that it will mean precisely the same confusion and legal uncertainty that the hybrid form of deregulation has in fact introduced to the North Atlantic mar-ket. The British, French and U.S. governments are currently at logger-

When small independent airlines call plainovely for freedom of the skies they do not mean total freedom. They mean the freedom enshrined in such treaties as the Bermuda 2 pact to compete on prices providing they are cost-related. What they do not mean is that the big national flag carriers should be free to cut their fares to uneconomical levels for as long as it takes to bankrupt their leaner, more efficient independent competitors.

The irony of independents such as Virgin Atlantic and People Express protesting against the bigger carriers' current round of price-cutting is nev-ertheless unmistakable.

So, too, was the spectacle of Mrs. Thatcher's free-market government bullying the Reagan administration could be vulnerable to further law suits charging it with the sort of fare zones plan is unacceptable. "Are "predatory pricing" collusion that allegedly bankrupted the original lowfare trailblazer, Laker Airways. All the signs are that six years of deregulation have forged and tem-pered U.S. airlines into an industry that can easily defend through great- real excesses of private enterprise." world's air traffic. In stark contrast, Europe's airlines remain the enemies of healthier competition. Now they are pleading that air safety and their steady 5- to 8-percent annual increases in traffic entail heavy investments that justify high prices. It is true that over the next decade the 135 airlines grouped in the International Air Transport Associa-tion will need $150 billion to $200 billion to buy more than 2,000 new aircraft. It is also true that this year they finally emerged from six years in the red with combined net earnings of only about $1.2 billion.

The airlines do have a case to make. Yet their campaign against the limited deregulation of Memorandum No. 2 at times takes the breath away with its effrontery. Karl-Heinz Neumeister, secretary-general of the Association of European Airlines, recently testified to the EC's Economic and Social Committee as to why the fare zones plan is unacceptable. "Are port, when governments in Europe already control or own the airlines?" he asked, adding: "Obviously, anti-trust laws are a method of protecting the consumer from the potential or really favor the liberalization of air transport, witness their blessing for the super-competiove London-Maastricht service of Virgin Airways. Yet it is the French government's fanatical opposition to fare-slashing that has suddenly brought European deregulation within reach.

In a supreme irony, France's officious attempts to stamp out discounting may instead spell the end of restrictive rules in the Community. An official prosecution before a Paris tribunal in September produced a sur-prisingly unnoticed milestone deci-sion. The French judge challenged the legality of waiving the EC compe-nion laws where airlines are concerned. He has referred his doubts about the airlines' exemption to the European Court of Justice in Luxem-bourg, which probably will deliver its opinion in mid-1985. If the EC court endorses the French tribunal's judgment, then the balloon really will go up in Europe's air fares war.

The Bold Chinese Experiment in Economic Reform

DURHAM, North Carolina — China has entered a new phase of development of all-round reforms. It is extending the reforms from the countryside to the cities, and from agriculture to industry, trade, science and culture.

Deng Xiaoping, China's top leader, has characterized these reforms as a "revolution" because they amount not only to a negation of the Cultural Revolution and the Great Leap For-ward but also to a rejection of the Soviet model, which China followed in the early 1950s with considerable success. The Chinese claim that by applying Marxist principles to Chinese realines they have found a specifically Chinese road to socialism. A key component of the current reform is a drastic modification of the planning method. This involves reducing the scope of the mandatory plan to include only items that are vital to the national interest and people's livelihood, such as the production of energy and basic raw materials, and the procurement (not production) of food grains, cotton and edible oils: enlarging the scope of the guidance plan to include the production of all major agricultural products, much of transportation and industries not subject to the mandatory plan; and leaving the service industries and the production of small commodioes to market forces.

The mandatory plan must be fulfilled. Targets under the guidance plan are to be met by means of economic levers such as prices, taxes and credits, and the production of some farm and sideline products and services are to be regulated by market demand. It is not market socialism but a mixed system with central planning and the market mechanism working side by side, and private and cooperative enterprises coexisting with state enterprises.

By Zhao Jinglun

ago. The Soviet model is characterized by a very high rate of investment, a priority on heavy industries (in-cluding defense) and a national policy of extremely limited imports. As a result of following that model, Chi-na eventually found its economy seri-ously out of kilter.

In an effort to readjust the economy, the Chinese have over the last five or six years succeeded in reducing the rate of state investment from 36.5 percent in 1978 to 30 percent in 1983. They have given top priority to the development of agriculture, con-sumer industries, energy and transportation, and have opened China's doors to the outside world. In short, China has turned the Soviet model upside down. A result has been the rapid growth of Chinese agriculture while the Russians have reaped six poor harvests in a row. At the core of the Chinese reform is an attempt to invigorate the state enterprises by granting them greater autonomy. Having separated the Communist Party from the government, the Chinese now are separating government administration from the day-to-day operations of these enterprises. The Chinese now argue that just as capitalist owners do not run their corporations themselves - they hire managers - so the socialist state should and can do the same by providing guidelines and policies and leaving the actual day-to-day operations of the enterprises to managers.

Instead of having the enterprises hand over their profits directly to the state treasury, as was the case, they are required to pay taxes (55 percent of their income) and are allowed to retain after-tax profits. The idea is to turn the state enterprises into independent accounting entities responsible for their own profits and losses, The rejection of the Soviet model is thereby providing incentive for them nothing new; it started several years to improve performance.

The Chinese government will concern itself with macroeconomic goals and leave microeconomic decisionmaking to the enterprises. This is perhaps the boldest experiment ever attempted by a Marxist state.
To make all this work, China also must reform the wage-price structure.

Chinese planners have long recognized the crucial importance of wage-price reform. They have besitated to tackle it, however, because it involves grave risks. When government subsidies and controls are removed, prices tend to rise and this directly affects the people's livelihood.

Chinese planners now feel that the conditions are ripe for them to procced cautiously with wage-price re-form by taking small incremental steps. Such complex reforms are bound to cause problems. There already have been reports of a run on the banks as people scramble to stock up in anticipation of inflationary price spirals. But the Chinese leadership is confident that things will not get out of hand. China is not Poland, for example. Its economy is not in the doldrums. It bas a respectable annual growth rate of about 8 percent, and growth has been relatively balanced.

As the economy improves, people's consumption patterns are changing. They now aspire to own television sets, washing machines and refrigera-tors. Deng Xiaoping's reforms must meet these rising expectations.

fudications so far are that the reforms are delivering the goods. They will create their own constituencies, and the chances are that they will overcome the resistance of those who stand to lose.

Capitalism: The Pastoral Reservations

Report to

Jun- 11

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON — In the past week. I have been across the United States, from Honolula to New York City, inspecting some of the 49 states President Reagan carried and meeting and answering questions from some of the people who re-elected him. the re-elected him.

the "savor the moment" spirit that the "savor the moment" spirit that survived the phony MiGs-to-Nicaragua scare cooked up by elements of the Reagan administration and the calculated leaks from David Stockman's budget office about borren-dous deficits facing the government. The country and its citizens are determined to celebrate this Thanks. giving with unfurrowed brows and, if possible, make the good times has through Christmas and New Year's Day. Time enough, then, to worry.

All this may help explain the rather churlish reaction to the pastoral letter released, in draft form, by a committee of Roman Catholic history her tee of Roman Catholic bishops last week, in which they declared "moral-ly unacceptable" the degree of poverty, unemployment and economic inty, unemployment and economic mequality existing in the United States and around the world these days.

From the brethren on the right, including George F. Will and William F. Buckley Jr., and the lions of laissez-faire on the editorial page of the Wall Street Journal, came cries of foul. Although they had not objected to the bishops preaching on matters of personal morality to individual candidates, they found fault with the church leaders speaking on issues of social morality to the society.

At the most unmannerly level, Mr.

At the most unmannerly level, Mr. Buckley grumbled about the "lumpen cliches" and "intellectual sloven-liness" of the bishops' statement. At a slightly higher plane of discourse, Mr. Will said they sounded "like just another liberal lobby."

Why this outrage? The ostensible target of the criticism was the bishops and or several of a waynery of a release to the criticism.

ops' endorsement of a variety of welops endorsement of variety of war-fare-state measures, whose usefulness is questioned not only by the conser-vatives but by politicians and econo-mists of other ideological bues. The bishops called for steeper rates of progressivity in the income tax, high-er minimum-wage and welfare levels and ambitious programs of public-service jobs for the hard-core unemployed - all of which are matters of legitimate policy debate.

But the re-election of Mr. Reagan has removed most of these measures from the list of current political opoons. The bishops can be criticized for being obtuse in their advocacy, but no one can seriously believe that the measures they endorsed are suddenly going to be embraced by this Congress or this administration.

I think the conservatives' anger with the churchmen has a deeper origin. It reflects the new conservatism's unease at the shaky moral foundations of its own economics. The talisman of their economics is "growth." They like that word better than "greed" or "acquisitiveness," for the latter words clearly imply selfishness, while the former conjures up happy pictures of providing something for everyone. If the Pharaohs had had the Wall Street Journal's wise publicrelations counsel, they would have forgotten about pyramids and built their monuments in microchips.

Yet even these true believers are not prepared to defend unrestrained capitalism as a good in itself. As the Journal put it in its editorial criticiz-ing the bishops' letter: "Modern capitalism is intended to serve the unique goals and needs of individuals ... [for] upward mobility. ... And the specific means to all these different personal goals is the individual freedom that capitalism provides in greater measure than any other system of economic organization." That is the equation they would like to prove: Capitalism equals freedom equals individual self-perfection. If that is true, then the greater an individual's or nation's wealth, the closer to perfect happiness.

The bishops know better. In conformance with the doctrine and teachings of their faith, they assert that capitalism, like any other human institution, should be judged, not just on the criterion of freedom, but of justice and equality as well.

By those criteria, a system that produces — as the American system has in the past half-decade - greater poverty and greater inequality, must be found wanting.

That is a hard message to swallow with the Thanksgiving turkey. It will not go down easily in the America I saw last week. Ronald Reagan was not re-elected by people who were questioning the ethic of take more. make more, spend more, get more if the bishops had just consulted with the "Tuesday Group" that did the Reagan campaign ads, they would have learned that "it's mooning in America." And few people want to think about tomorrow.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The U.S. Role in Chile

I was amazed to read the Washington Post editorial ("The Troubles in Chile," Nov. 13) stating that the U.S. role in the 1973 Chilean coup was "peripheral," and that American responsibility for the downfall of Chilean democracy was mere "myth." To claim that the United States was not at least indirectly responsible for the ouster of Salvador Allende, a democratically elected president, and the accession of General Augusto Pinochet, seems ignorant. After Mr. Allende's fall, a Senate committee found that millions of U.S. dollars were spent in attempts to prevent Mr. Allende's election. The panel also found that U.S. agents made themselves available to anti-

Allende forces, making clear that money and U.S. recognition would be forthcoming if there was a coup.

General Pinochet, despite his reign of terror, could not have survived without U.S. aid or recognition. Finally, the congressional panel found that large amounts of money and technical assistance were provided by U.S. agents to anti-government forces. All this is hardly "peripheral," hardly a "myth."

The point is not whether it was justified — that is a political and philosophical issue. The point is that it happened. The United States was at least indirectly responsible for the downfall of Chilean democracy.

Those Helping Zaire The news report "Zaire Says

Troops Oust Insurgents From Town (Nov. 17), mentions the evacuation of relief workers from Manono to Nairobi. The article incorrectly lists these as workers of the United Methodist Church. In fact, they are an emergency medical team sent by Internio (International Christian Aid). They are doctors and nurses from Switzerland. France, West Germany and other countries. The Internid medical teams are flying back to Zaire this week with a load of emergeacy medicines to continue their viral work in an area where half of all children die by the age of 5.

Syria Seeks to Moderate Policies of Iran, Others

By Ihsan A. Hijazi New York Times Service

BEIRUT - Syria is seeking to persuade Iran to moderate its policies on several Middle East issues and to prevail upon its followers in the region to do the same, according to Arab diplomats and some press reports here.

The Arab diplomats said that President Hafez al-Assad was seeking Iranian cooperation to end the four-year war with Iraq and improve relations between Iran and France. He also is believed to be seeking Iran's support for the troop withdrawal negotiations between Lebanon and Israel that resumed last week.

Vice President Abdel Halim Khaddam of Syria returned to Damascus on Sunday after a 24-hour visit to Tehran, where he is said to have delivered a message from President Assad to Iran's president, Ali Khamenei.

Mr. Khaddam said that the letter deals with regional questions of mutual interest.

Farouk al-Sharaa, the Syrian forcign minister, who accompanied Mr. Khaddam to Tehran, was re-ported to be in the Saudi capital, Riyadh, on Tuesday for talks with his Saudi counterpart, Prince Saud al-Faisal. He was expected to brief Saudi leaders on the results of the talks in Tehran.

Syria is Iran's main ally in the Arab world, having sided with Tehran against Iraq in the Gulf war. There is no love lost between President Assad and President Saddam Hussein of Iraq. But the diplomats said that Damascus has been asked by its other Arab allies, notably Saudi Arabia, to use its good offices with the Iranians so they may agree to a negotiated end to the war with Iraq.

Tehran has said it will not consider a peace settlement until President Hussein has been removed from power. The Syrians earlier this year failed to persuade Iran's meini, to change that position. The fresh Syrian initiative is on the eve of the annual conference of the six members of the Gulf Cooperation Council. The leaders of Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Qatar, Bahrain, the United Arab Emirates and Oman are scheduled to meet in Kuwait on Nov. 27 to discuss problems affecting their security. Most of these problems stem from the Iraq-Iran war, which has endangered the oil routes.

A Kuwaiti newspaper, Al Seyassa, said Tuesday that it had learned that Syria was trying to mend fences between France and Iran. In an item quoted on Arab radio stations, the newspaper said the Damascus government has been in contact with Tehran and Paris in an attempt to improve relations between the two countries. The item, which did not quote specific sources, said that President Assad's message to President Khamenei dealt with that question.

Syria has improved its own relations with France, President François Mitterrand is scheduled to visit Syria on Thursday.

Relations between France and Iran have been strained over what Tehran regards as Paris's policies biased in favor of Baghdad. A constant supply of French weapons to Iraq, including Super Etendard fighter jets and Exocet air-to-surface missiles, seems to have kept the overall military balance in the war on Iraq's side. French institutions, soldiers and diplomats in the Middle East bave been the targets of terrorist attacks ascribed to Moslem fundamentalists linked to Iran. President Assad has denied that Syria was behind the attacks. He said that Damascus deplored all forms of terror, but supported resistance lighters seeking to drive Jordan Names Envoy to Cairo Israeli troops from Lebanon.

The 'Third Wave' of Japanese Designers

By Gloria Noda

TOKYO -On the volatile Japanese fashion scene, where the design industry is still in adolescent freedom in comparison to the West, designers can be divided into two groups: those who do international styling, and very Japanese designers who are preoccupied with fabric and texture.

In this fast-changing climate, several new designers are beginning to make their mark, as was evident in their recent spring showings in Tokyo. The showings, sponsored by the nonprofit Fashion Foundation with government support, featured 12 young designers who to-gether were labeled the "third

Universal Will Re-Release 'Glenn Miller Story' in 1985

By Aljean Harmetz

New York Times Service LOS ANGELES — "The Glenn Miller Story," a 1954 movie starring James Stewart and June Allyson, has been pulled off the shelf at Universal Studio and will be reissued around the world next April or May.

Why should Universal decide to restore and re-release a 30-year-old movie about a hand leader who died 40 years ago?

There are many answers, not the least of which is the success that Universal has had this year with its worldwide reissue of five Alfred Hitchcock movies. The five —
"Rear Window." "Vertigo," "The Man Who Knew Too Much," "The Trouble With Harry" and "Rope"
- have sold nearly $17 million worth of tickets in the United States and more than $20 million worth in Latin America, Europe and Australia.

Part of the success of the Hitchcock movies is credited by Universal to James Stewart, who stars in all but "The Trouble With Harry" and who toured the world with the Krupa on drums.

Somewhere along the way some-one lost sight of the basic simplicity and power of this play, and as a result we are left with a few good moments and one or two striking performances - notably Stephen Moore as the chaplain and Zoe Wanamaker as the dumb Kattrin - but not a lot else.

Though I have not always been among the leading fans of Sir Peter Hall's administration at the National Theatre, there come times when even I have to stand up in its favorite picture. And 1984 was the defense. It has taken Oliver Gold-40th anniversary of Glenn Miller's smith's "She Stoops to Conquer" death."

Moreover, to heart of so many of the National's recent mistakes. have Dench up there on the Barbi-can arena belung out songs that even Bertolt Brecht should have

To Hampstead this month has come the Foco Novo company's production of "Bloody Poetry," a new and often very impressive play about Byron and Shelley and their attendant ladies in Italy between 1816 and 1822. Howard Brenton has brilliantly avoided the usual Hollywood trap ("Morning, Byron, How's Shelley" and "Has anyone seen Willie Wordsworth?") and instead given us a waspishly comic look at two men who set out to change ohe world and ended up by destroying their own families. "What do you scribbling pets have in common?" asks Shelley's mistress (Fiona Shaw in a wonderfully imperious performance). "You all go to bed with your sisters."

One of Brenton's many insights into the two great 19th-century British romantic poets is that although apparently highly contrasted (Byron the self-seeking selfish libertine, Shelley the socialist idealist) they had a great deal more in common with each other than with anyone else. Both were catastrophically destructive in their romantic relationships, both loathed Words-worth ("serious hut a hit of a bitch") and both had only the haziest notion of the politics they were supposed to be fighting for. Both drifted around Italy strewing the landscape with bastards and bills. and each had a healthy appreciation of the theatricality of the other: "Are we going out?" asks Byron of Shelley at one point in a marathon poetic debate "or are you just going to fall about in another visionary fit?"

Wars of liberation are being fought as they agonize over who gets to sleep with whose mistress, and what is so splendid about Brenton's play is the way it allies that comic despair with a very real awareness of the deaths they seemed both to embrace and to cause. As children expire and wives jump into the lake, however, it is Shelley the idealist who causes far more domestic destruction than Byron the rake. There's a moral in there somewhere.

Children of Indochina Determined to Build New Life in America

By Robert Coles

ASHINGTON — They are good children," said Margaret McCourt-Dirner, the principal of the Abingdon Elementary School in Arlington, Virginia, in response to an inquiry about how the Cambodian, the Laotian, the Vietnamese boys and girls were managing in their classes. When pressed for details, she speaks with assurance and out of conviction. "They are eager to learn. They are considerate and well behaved. They are good citizens in our community."

The teachers in the school say many of the same things. They emphasize how polite, courte-ous, obliging, alert these "refugee children" are. In Nancy McCracken's class of students for whom English is a second language, children 7, g and 9 years of age, most originally from Southeast Asia, are learning how to read.

The favorable comments come to mind again about their school day, eager to master spelling, to learn how to add and subtract and multiply When they salute the American flag, when they pledge allegiance to the United States of America, they speak with a telling earnestness that

Yet, they are words that convey fierce pride, an unyielding determination — handed bravely from parent to child, and remembered constantly, it seems, no matter the thousands of miles between there and here, the thousands of days between then and now.

For these children there have been many moments of anxiety, apprehension, regret, even despair. They have endured persecution, exile, hunger, the loss of parents, relatives, friends. Sometimes there are bad dreams, moments a particular child may describe tersely, but tellngly: "I wake up and I realize I've been back there, and they're trying to kill us, all of us, the soldiers are." Still, that girl is soon enough back to sleep: "I'm tired, and so I don't stay awake

Managers Can Find Rewards Imports of Guiding Troubled Firms

By SHERRY BUCHANAN International Herald Tribune

ARIS — "We've just had a goodbye party for the bank-ruptcy lawyers," says Sanford C. Sigoloff, chairman and chief executive officer of Wickes Cos., which has almost completed reorganization as part of one of the largest bankruptcy cases in U.S. corporate history.

Mr. Signloff was in Paris for a three-day vacation, his first since Wickes filed for protection from creditors under Chapter 11 of the U.S. bankruptcy code in April 1982. For those at the top, guiding a U.S. company through bankruptcy proceedings can be a grueling but rewarding experience.

of the Atlantic. Chapter 11 looks profit this year. Earlier this fall, a federal like a good deal.

Earlier this fall, a federal bankruptcy judge approved Wickes' reorganization plan. It is the U.S. retail chain's first step on its way out of Chapter 11. Wickes has subsidiaries in West Germany, Britain and the Netherlands. If all goes according to plan, Wickes will emerge from Chapter 11 protection at the end of January 1985.

Under Chapter 11 of the U.S. Bankruptcy Code of 1978, companies in trouble are protected from creditors' lawsuits and companies in trouble are protected from creditors' lawsuits and given time to reorganize. With the rise in insolvencies in France, Britain and West Germany, European industries have been pushing their governments to change existing bankruptcy laws which they say encourage company liquidations (and job losses). rather than reorganizations.

From this side of the Atlantic, Chapter II looks like a good deal. However, in seeking reform of British and French bankruptcy laws, its detractors wonder whether Chapter 11 is the right legal model for European lawmakers to emulate.

ome U.S. companies, notably Wilson Foods Corp. and Continental Airlines, have been accused of using Chapter 11 to break labor contracts. Others sought protection from products liability lawsuits, such as Manville Corp., which filed for protection under Chapter 11 in part because of thousands of achestos, related claims against it. asbestos-related claims against it.
"I think their exceptional uses of Chapter II that wouldn't be times their exceptional uses of Chapter II that wouldn't be tried again," says Mr. Sigoloff.

By all accounts, the Wickes reorganization plan proves that Chapter II can work to the benefit of the remaining 150,000 creditors, the banks shareholders and employees. Under the reorganization plan approved by the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in Los Angeles, Wickes will settle about $1.25 billion of debt over the next five years through a combination of cash, notes and new share issues. The first cash payment of $299 million is due in December. The most senior elasses of debt holders will get more than 90 cents on the dollar, others will get between 80 cents and 96 cents to the dollar and the most junior debt holders will get 55

Wickes' successful emergence from Chapter 11 proceedings is due in large part to Mr. Sigoloff and his tough management style. He is a veteran of large corporate bankruptcies, having guided Daylin Inc., a Los Angeles-based retailer, through a 11/2-year bankruptcy reorganization in the mid-1970s.

Dubbed "Ming the Merciless," Mr. Sigoloff took on the Wickes job in March 1982, a month before the Chapter 11 filing. He soon decided major surgery was needed. With his team, he sold or closed 15 Wickes divisions reducing annual revenue from $4 billion to $3 billion. That meant laying off about 10,000 employees, cutting the staff from 38,000 employees to 28,000 employees. But it also meant saving 28,000 jobs. The corporate staff was cut from 400 to 100.

In the Wickes experience, the toughest management problems were getting the banks to lend more money and getting employees to work long hours. Most creditors, particularly suppliers, have an interest in their clients staying alloat. The same isn't true of the banks. "The banks say you're causing me to put reserves on my books," says (Continued on Page 13, Col. 5)

U.S. Halts EC Pipe

Ban Effective Until Dec. 31

> By Carl Hartman Associated Press

WASHINGTON - U.S. customs agents have been ordered to halt imports of steel pipes and tubes from the 10 European Com-munity countries from Nov. 29 to the end of the year, an assistant U.S. trade representative said

Charles Blum said EC ministers will meet Thursday in Brussels to discuss the issue, and the U.S. halt in imports may be altered if they offer a plan to the United States.

Mr. Blum said the stoppage of imports was ordered because of a large increase in imports from Eu-rope. He refused to speculate on what the Europeans might offer af-ter their Thursday meeting.

His comments followed a confusing series of reports from the U.S. Trade Representative's office, the Commerce Department and the EC trade delegation in Washing-

Initial reports of a temporary halt in imports were disputed by Desiree Tucker, a spokeswoman for the Trade Representative's office. She said the United States instead was limiting imports to 5.9 percent of the U.S. market for steel pipes and tubes during the Nov. 29-Dec. 31 period.

Federal authorities are under pressure from the domestic steel industry to curb imports as a way to preserve steel orders and jobs in the United States. President Ronald Reagan has pledged to keep steel imports down to 20 percent of the U.S. market this year.

Under an exchange of letters in 1982 between Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige and Etienne Davignon, then the European Community's commissioner for industry, imports of steep pipes and tubes from EC countries were to be held to 5.9 percent of the U.S. mar-agreed limits oo other steel prodtubes.

An EC official who spoke only on condition that she not be identified said European exports of pipes and tubes to the United States by the cod of August already had topped 14 percent of the expected U.S. market for the entire year.

This official, however, insisted there had been no European diversion to pipes and tubes. She attributed the rise in European exports to market conditions.

European shipments of pipes and tubes totaled 470,000 tons worth $250 million last year, she said, and the total rose to 926,000 tons for the first eight months of 1984. She had no dollar value for this year's shipments.

Dollar Rises In Europe,

United Press International

NEW YORK — The dollar shot above the key 3-Deutsche-mark level Tuesday despite the report of weak U.S. gross national product figures and lower interest rates. Gold prices were little changed.

"The market just decided to dis-regard the GNP and the softer Fed funds [overnight rate] and take the dollar up," said Earl Johnson, vice president at Chicago's Harris Bank. "The market psychology is turning bullish in spite of every-thing telling it the opposite."

All indicators seem to call for a weaker dollar. Interest rates have dropped sharply in the past two months — the Fed funds fell to 9% percent Tuesday - partly in response to an effort by the Federal Reserve to pump up money growth and keep the U.S. economic recovery going.

The record federal budget and through the dollar's surge to record and near-record high levels this year. But the weakening economy has brought the market's focus on discouraging prospects of narrowing either deficit.

CBS Purchases 12 Magazines United Press International

NEW YORK - CBS Inc. announced Tuesday that it has signed an agreement to purchase the consumer magazines business of Ziff-Davis Publishing Co. for $362.5 million cash and assumption of subscription liabilities.

The purchase covers 12 magzines: Backpacker, Boating, Car & Driver, Cycle, Flying, Modern Bride, Popular Photog-rapby, Skiing, Skiing Trade News, Stereo Review, The Run-

Mary McInnis Boies, a spokeswoman for the broadcasting, recording and publishing company, said editorial staffs and operations of the magazines are expected to remain unchanged.

The transaction is expected to be completed in January 1985.

Ziff-Davis had announced earlier its intention to sell its consumer publications group and its business publications group. William Ziff, charman of Ziff Corp., cited purely per-sonal reasons for the sale, saying he wanted to scale down the company in a more closely held

"We hope these will come to an early and satisfactory conclusion," ing Countries and other producers. Norway tried to prop up prices with the standard psychological charades. Prices on the spot, or noncontract, market - accounting for per-haps a third of all oil trade worldwide - were as much as $3.50 below official prices charged to reg-ular contract customers. So Statoil advised its dozen major customers to exercise options to reduce purchases at contract prices and make up the difference by buying about half their crude at spot marketrelated prices.

This method produced an average price for Statoil's Statijord crude in September of $29, compared with the official price of $29.60. The customers were content, and the market was spared the unsettling news of a price-cut announcement Defyiog most expectations, though, the oil market remained feeble in October; Statoil's customers demanded lower prices. At this point, as one British oil executive recalled, "Statoil acted in a rather strange way."

The company clammed up and delayed a decision on October's

At least one major customer warned Statoil that the move would panic a market already weakened by poorly disguised discounts from bigger oil producers. This customer suggested that Statoil find a way to et customers continue to buy at least a small part of their supplies at the old official price, preserving appearances. Statoil declined to discuss the matter in detail but suggested that some of its customers would reject such a maneuver.

Two days later, the price cut leaked to the press. Britain and Nigeria quickly chimed in with deeper price cuts, and OPEC was forced to call an emergency meet-ing and promise to choke back on production.

Statoil, all the while, seemed amazed that the outside world should attach such significance to a price cut that merely matched openly the veiled discounts of other producers. "The market was looking for someone in blame," reasoned Statoil's Mr. Olsen.

RIDE A PALE HORSE

By Helen MacInnes. 350 pp. $15.95. Harcourt Brace Jovanovich. 757 Third Ave., New York, N.Y. 10017.

Reviewed by Maude McDaniel

HIS is 1984, so the villains must be Communists. One of the most topical of all spy novelists, Helen Maclones has kept up with the news ever sioce her first novel "Above Suspicion" in 1941 featured Nazis in the role of despicable dastards.
In that respect, "Ride a Pale Horse" is no exception. Neither will it break the record of her 20 previous novels, all of which were best sellers and remain in print. But "Pale Horse" is just one more rearrangement of standardized parts. The old weaknesses — paper people and a jerry-built style — are magnified, and the old streogths - colorful travelogues and riveting suspense — are eroded.

Karen Cornell is 37, widowed, beautiful and wears linen a lot. She's an up-and-coming American reporter in Czochoslovakia coverin an international peace coovention, is contacted by Josef Vasek, a KGB colonel who plans to defect and passes along several Russian forgeries to underline his importance to the West. He also mentions the existence of a mole in the CIA, without, however, naming him.

No doubt this was meant to set up an extended suspense element in the story, but the turncoats (there are three of them) are fingered quite early in the game and without much in the way of detective ingenuity. This leaves Vasek's ulterior motives as the only puzzle left, and they turn out to be more complicated but less exciting than the original documented threat, which at least involved starting a ouclear war. The biggest surprise in the story, in fact, is that there are no real surprises.

There is love, of course. There's always love in a MacInnes book, and here it sparks between Kareo and Peter Bistow, a genuine, good-guy. CIA disinformatioo expert, who takes over the action and the brainwork from Karen halfway into the book. He saves her from terrorist assassination, whereupon she retires to his Washington apartment for the remaioder of the story. Aside from a girlish shot into the ceiling when the Communist agents invade, she takes very little effective part in the rest of the proceedings except to preoccupy Peter's spare moments.

Certain Maclanes characteristics some critics complain about are rather charming in contrast to much of spy fiction, which has become heavy-breathing and almost amoral. She has never been in doubt as to whose side she's on. (Her political conservatism seems less preachy in this book than in some past ones, but no less pronounced.) She has oever exploited sex or ladled out unnecessary horror or violeoce.

So it is not Maclanes's old-fashioned qualities that dishearten, but a new fatigue that seems to invade these pages, a kiod of enervation that shows in banal conversation, perfunctory descriptions and the kind of backward plotting that seems to work retroactively from the known facts of the conclusion to dictate which of the several options a character will choose in a given situation. For a reader moving the opposite way, many of these directions: and intuitions seem arbitrary and without motivation. Despite the torthous iotogue and promising material — Prague, Vienna, Rome, the peculiar Russian art form of disinformation — "Ride a Pale Horse" really does not carry its weight The title comes from the Book of Revelation; 'And I looked, and behold a pale horse: And his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him."

Well, that seems a little severe. Let's just say that Maclimes has door better before.

Maude McDamel, a writer from Cumberland Maryland, wrote this review for The Washington

Ali Sharp in Workout — With Press

By Michael Katz New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Questions from reporters were always his best medicine. And as the 65minute interview warmed up and the questions got tougher. Muhammad Ali got sharper.

The 42-year-old Ali was in town Monday for the first time since his three-day hospitalization two months ago for tests that showed the three-time heavyweight champion was suffering from the symptoms of Parkinsoo's syndrome. The slurred speech, the unsteady walk, the overall fatigue that permeated his appearance were all there as he sat in the Downtown Athletic Club with a dozen reporters. He posed with the Heisman Trophy, which he almost fum-bled, and he mugged while re-ceiving the club's Rocky Marciano Award. And he talked, at first softly and unclearly and then louder and funnier. Talking always made him feel better. Doctors at Columbia Presbyterian Hospital prescribed a combination of the drugs Sinemet and Symmetrel three times a day for his symptoms. Said Ali: "They told me what I need to do" — not that he does it.

"All he's got to do is take the medicine and he'll be all right," said Herbert Muhammad, his longtime manager. "That's the problem. He doesn't always take "Not like I should," said Ali.

"I'm lazy and I forget."
"He says he doesn't have pain," said Muhammad, "so he doesn't take it." Ali sat down at a table with the reporters and had to repeat several of the first questions to an aide kneeling behind him. Where am I going tomorrow?" he asked.

"Saudi Arabia." echoed. "I'm so busy know what I'm doing." He said be had trips planned for Beijing, Singapore, "even Es-tonia, Russia." But he was not sure exactly when he arrived in New York - three days ago from a trip to Nigeria.

"Do you feel any better than the last time you were here?" he was asked. "I felt good then," he whispered. "I never felt better in my life. I've got no pain." He said the Marciano award, for being a champion in and out of the ring, was a "big honor."

"I remembered as a kid watching all those guys fight," he said,
"It's a big honor to be ranked with them." Someone wanted to know if he thought his successor as heavyweight champion, Larry Holmes, should retire. "I can't advise no one to retire because I didn't," he He was asked why he continued fighting, unsuccessfully challenging Holmes in 1980 and losing to Trevor Berbick in another comeback attempt in 1981. "In my case, I believed I had enough to beat Holmes and Berbick," he said. "But you don't believe it 'il you try it. I figured I knew myself better than you."

Did he bave any regrets about continuing to fight? "No."

Not even after the battering he took from Hohnes? "I tried to get the title for the fourth time. Some astronauts died trying to get to the moon." His illness, he said, has not changed things.

"I'm more celebrated, have more fans and believe I am more loved than all the superstars this nation has produced," he said.
"We have a saying 'Him whom Allah raises none can lower.' 1 "Oh, yeah, Saudi Arabia." Ali believe I have been raised by God. You think the spiritua world is not big. Turn on any television any Sunday and watch Oral Roberts or Billy Graham. You know Jimmy Swaggart? He can preach.

"If I had to pay for my press, it'd cost me $100 billion. I am a master at staying in the news. When I was in the hospital, beadlines. When I checked out of the hospital, headlines. I mean, front page. Do you think I'm dying?" Did he think boxing was the cause of his illness?

"I don't know. So many peo-ple have it that didn't box."

But wasn't it possible that boxing burt him? "You get hit that many times so many years, something's got to happen." His face, less puffy than it has been often in the recent past, was bright, and Ali looked fit in his black business suit. But, opening his jacket to grab a roll of mid-niff, he said he weighed about 240 pounds (108.8 kilograms). "I should jog," he said. "I should go to the gym. But I have so many demands on my time. I got mail stacked up at home I should answer. "You know wby I don't look so bad?" be said, patting his black hair. "Because I've got the good dye." He was rold that his hospitalization created a stir to ban box-

"They've been saying that before I went to the hospital," he said. "I went to see a motorcycle race. Vroom, vroom — flying steel. Crash. A jet goes up, and it comes down — crash — and 150 people get killed. They don't stop jets. But a Negro gets burt, a cut eye, or brain damage, and, 'Oh, it's so terrible, we ought to stop

"Meanwhile, there's a brother Harlem getting robbed and a white policeman just walks in a house and shoots an 80-year-old woman. They don't stop that But boxing is so bad. I think it's racist. White people, not all white people, just certain white people, are envious of black people getting a foothold in a busi-ness. Blacks, we're making money and it's a platform for ns." Someone asked him what be thought of Holmes. "I have nothing to say about Larry but good," Ali replied. "He's great, he's undefeated." What about your next fight, someone joked, and Ali sat up, suddenly interested. "Punny you should mention that. I've got this king [promoter Don King, pre-sumably] who's going to put up $20 million in Estonia, Russia." Who's the opponent? Ali pretended it was a secret, then let everyone in on it: "Gerrie Coetzee. See, no white South African from apartheid can whup me." "Maybe you aren't feeling so well," someone said.

"Hey, just joking. Scratch all that, I know you all miss me. I 29th NHL player ever to reach 500.

The Bulls, who have lost three straight, beld a 69-63 halftime lead and increased the margin to 79-67 with 9:03 left in the third quarter before Fleming scored 12 points and Sichting 7 to give Indiana a 102-96 lead entering the final peri-od. The Pacers shot 59 percent in the third quarter and took the lead for good, at 86-85, when Fleming hit a pair of free throws at 4:12. Irvine also cited his team's 52-37 rebounding. "Rebounding is our strength," be said. "We've only been beaten once this year on the boards. Tonight we knew rebounding would keep us in the game." Forward Clark Kellogg had 12 re-bounds to lead Indiana while center Steve Stipanovich added 10. Chicago rookie Michael Jordan had a game-high 34 points while Orlando Woolridge added 27. Herb Williams had 19 for Indiana and Stipanovich 16.

clearly than that doesn't deserve the minimum wage, much less a listing in Forbes as one of the richest people in America," I said.

Compers's grunt was eloquent.
"All right, Gompers, since you've got the impertinence to wonder why I think I deserve to be on the Forbes list, I'll tell you why: because I've worked hard all my life, and lived by the Scout's code, and always volunteered, and invested in the stock markets instead of the race track, and believed in Asking the question aloud, I suddenly realized how unjustly the world had treated me and how un-deserving of great wealth the peo-ple on the Forbes list were. It made me despise them.

It made me want to impoverish every one of them, to see them at my door pleading for merial house-hold chores and whimpering with gratitude when I offered them 65 cents an hour to scrub the rings out of my bathtuh.

"I don't see where working hard on the American dream has any, thing to do with being richest, "said Gompers. "A lot of people get themselves born so they could inherit money from their parents."

In his dull-witted way, Gompers had put his finger on the very core of the injustice. It made me proud I had hired him. "Gompers," I said.
"I. too, got myself born and so, logically, I, too, should have inherited billions from my parents."
"Right," said Gompers, "and since I also got myself born —"

"That's not the same thing. Gompers. You were born to work for 75 cents an hour." I paused to reconsider. "Perhaps only 70 cents an hout," I said.

I knew what he would say: He accused me of being unfair. It made me want to sob. That labor could accuse me of unfairness - that hurt. Had anyone suffered greater unfairness than I? Had I not got myself born, just like the richest people in the United States, only to be told that there wasn't so much as a sou for me to inherit?

Carrie Rozelle: Dealing With Dyslexia

By Fred Ferretti

New York Times Service

New York — "I felt every day was going to be a hurricane," said Carrie Rozelle, recalling the days years ago when her son Jack's severe dyslexia was making him violent. "Because he couldn't read he developed emotional problems," she said. "He had difficulties with his hrothers. He took toys. He hroke them. He would steal. His books were torn up. There were lots of tears, lots of shouting, lots of anger."

Yet out of this wrenching experience has come good, she said. Jack, now 22 years old, forced himself through special education programs and is working in film production. Her personal involvement in her son's learning disabilities spurred Rozelle to create the Foundation for Children With Learning Disabilities (FCLD), a national voluntary orga-nization dedicated to educating the public and increasing its awareness of such disabil-

Carrie Rozelle, 47, who has been married since 1973 to Pete Rozelle, commissioner of the National Football League, said that in her view, and from her experience with the learning disabilities of two of her three sons, Jack and Ralph, 17, "the greatest need is public awareness." The reason is that there are an estimated 10 million children "diagnosed as learning-disabled," she said.

She talks animatedly of her experiences with her children and of what she considers her mission.

"I discovered that Jack was dyslexic when be was eight," she said. "This young boy, physically healthy, was having difficulties in school. He would act up in the playground and the classroom. He was behind in reading, the state of the second in Lorentz and the classroom. in math. He was in his third school in Los Angeles when a teacher, somehow clued in to Angales when a teacher, somehow clued in to disabilities, suggested that he be tested."
Such tests, though simple, require time and money, she said, but should be dooe when every child enters kindergarten.

After the diagnosis, she said, "we began a hunt for schools."

"What we found was not much awareness of the problem," she said. "We found one school and it worked for a while, but only for a while. By the time Jack was 10 he had been to six schools," She was divorced from her first bushand during this period. "Jack's fa-ther was no longer there," she said. "We moved away. All his stability vanished. But we came east and began looking into schools

Her son Philip, 15, does not have learning disabilities, and is a student at a Connecticut preparatory school, and her daughter, Jeannie, 24, who has no disabilities either, is a graduate of the New York University Film School and is a producer for NFL

Mrs. Rozelle said the most difficult message to get across is that learning disabilities are not the same as mental retardation. There is no correlation at all," she said. 'These are physiological problems that do not affect intellect. The hyperactivity and antisocial behavior that accompanies them is usually the result of the frustrations felt by the child. Jack's problem has led me to understand that parents must have their children tested, because then you know - then you able to deal with the problem."

The Foundation for Children With Learning Disabilities, in existence less than seven years, finances telephone hotelines in the United States, library services for children with disabilities, a program to help make family court judges aware of the relationships between learning disabilities and antisocial behavior and a program through the American Bar Association aimed at improving legal services to children with disabilities.

Carrie Rozelle: "I felt every day was going to be a hurricane."

Rozelle said the foundation now is able to give more than $1 million a year to schools and programs for people with such disabilities as dyslexia, in which reading perceptions are disordered or nonexistent; aphasia, the loss of the power to use or understand words; perceptual handicaps, and impaired brain functions. All are usually manifested in "an imperfect ability to listen, think, speak, read, write, spell or to do mathematical calculations," she has written in "The FCLD Guide for Parents of Children with Learning Dis-

The foundation also publishes Their World, an annual magazine with articles about and for those with learning disabilities.

Runners Go for Broke

the world say they are nearly broke but want to continue. Barety a fifth of the way through their 25,600-kilometer (15,900-mile) journey, Robin Cross, 24, and Henry Wes-ton, 23, said in Damascus that they have little money and are thor-oughly frustrated after being robbed in France, arrested in Yugoslavia, held at gunpoint by sol-diers in Turkey, chased by wolves and delayed for weeks by customs officials along the way. The run-ning has been simple compared to all the other problems we've faced," Cross said. "We've never really totally considered going home, but we've come pretty close,' said Weston. He said they had less than £200 (about $250) to last them from Damascus to Sydney, where more financial help has been prom-ised.

rupted four other Monopoly wizards has earned the right to repre-sent the United States in next year's world championship of the popular board game. Jim Forbes, 36, of Winter Haven, took less than two hours to win the final match of the seventh annual U.S. Monopoly championship Monday in Los Angeles. Forbes won a gold medallion and a berth in the world Monopoly competition, which will be held in Atlantic City, New Jersey — site of the real-life Boardwalk, Park Place and other addresses in the game. Parker Bros. will donate $4,692 the total yearly rents of all Monopoly board properties — to three charities chosen by Forbes. The world championships will mark Parker Bros. 50th anniversary as marketer of the real estate game invented by Charles B. Darrow. The game has been translated into 19 languages and sold more than 90 million copies worldwide, Parker Bros. said.
